Extract from the Mechanics' Fair Daily
Press Sept. 6. 1864.

Early in the spring of 1860, the proposition began to be discussed for holding a

THIRD INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION

This step was finally resolved upon, and an arrangement made with Mr. Lick for a new lease of his lot on Montgomery street, for the purpose of putting up another Pavilion, the old one in the meantime having been removed. This structure, a correct representation of which has been furnished by our engraver, and placed immediately under the view of that erected for the two previous exhibitions, was parallelogram in shape, occupying 150 feet on Montgomery street and extending 200 feet on Sutter. Its cost was $8,450. The Exhibition opened on the 3d of September, under quite flattering auspices. The opening address was pronounced by J. W. Cherry, Esq. Notwithstanding the hopes of success which attended the initiation of this Exhibition, though highly creditable to the skill and industry of the city and State, it was far from a pecuniary success. The receipts fell some two or three thousand dollars short of the expenses, and placed the Institute under quite embarrassing circumstances.
